Saffron

The biggest exporter of saffron in the world! Spain is also one of the cultivator of saffron but Spain has got the first position on the field of saffron exporting.

Our Sale representative in Barcelona Spain alongside with our head office in Europe exports saffron in various packages (bulk saffron sale and retail saffron sale) all over the world.

How to grow saffron?

Saffron strands are the stigmas of the saffron crocus, Crocus sativus. While they're easy to grow you'll need to buy a lot of bulbs – around 150 flowers will produce one gram of saffron. Saffron crocuses flower in autumn.

Saffron crocus bulbs are widely available from mail-order bulb and seed companies. Plant them in summer in moist but well-drained soil and water well. To harvest the saffron strands, simply remove using tweezers, and dry them before using them to add delicate colour and flavour to a range of dishes.

When the crocuses flower in autumn, harvest the saffron strands by removing the long, bright orange-red stigmas from the centre of the flowers using tweezers. Each flower produces just three stigmas, so harvest them carefully.

Lay out the harvested stigmas on a paper towel to dry out thoroughly for a few days in a warm, dry place, then store in an air-tight container. Use sparingly in a wide range of dishes, both savoury and sweet, where they will add colour and flavour.
